Q2. (Marks (6+4x3=18)) Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions appended to it. Note: Question (i) about summary writing is carrying 06 marks while rest of the questions carry 03 marks each.

Do you know that exercise can improve your sleep, enhance your mood, and decrease feelings of anxiety, depression, and stress? In fact, studies show that physical activity can treat moderate depression as effectively as leading antidepressant medications, without the side effects. If you want to reap the benefits of exercise for well-being, you can start small. According to a study conducted by the Harvard T.H. Chan school of public health, running for even 15 minutes or walking for an hour a day can decrease the risk of depression by 26%. Likewise, life learning is more than just a positive way to spend your time: it's also an excellent way to maintain well-being. Research shows that learning improves confidence and self-esteem, promotes a sense of purpose, helps build connections with others, and can slow cognitive aging. With that in mind, get out there and learn something new. Use a language app to learn a language or sign up for a class at a local university. It's fun and good for your well-being. Generosity feels great, but can it improve your well-being? The answer is yes. If you're looking for a way to start giving back, begin with your community. Do some research on community organizations that support causes you're interested in or donate some money to a local food bank or shelter. The great thing about charitable work is that there are thousands of ways to do it, so you can find a cause that truly ignites your passion and aligns with your interests. Most of us have experienced, first-hand, how stressful it can be to live in the past or the future. When we live in the past, we get caught up in the shame, anger, and regret associated with old emotions or negative situations we've experienced. When we're caught up in the future, it's easy to be consumed by anxiety and anticipation about what will come. So, it's no wonder that learning to pay attention to the present is such a critical component of well-being. [The words enhance, anxiety, reap, build and passion are underlined in the source scan]

Q2. (Marks (6+4x3=18)) Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions appended to it. Note: Question (i) about summary writing is carrying 06 marks while rest of the questions carry 03 marks each.

Gertrude was just an average kid with an average life. She lived in an average sized house in an average neighbourhood in a totally typical town. At home, she helped out just enough to slide by. At school, she did just enough homework to stay out of trouble. She had straight C's in all of her classes. One day Gertrude's teacher, Mr. Minster, stopped her after class. 'Gertrude,' he said, 'I know that you can do better. I've seen the work you do in class, and some of it is amazing... way better than 'C' work.' Gertrude knew that there were moments when she did try a little harder than what everyone expected, like when she put extra time with her into some of the dishes to make them really sparkle; or, when she took extra time with her handwriting on a few problems of her homework to make it look fancy. But she just didn't have confidence in herself. She didn't really believe that she could change; in fact, she was scared by the thought of having the power to become whatever she wanted. She had done just enough to get by for so long that being mediocre was her lifestyle. She stopped listening to Mr. Minister about half way through and just nodded her head until he stopped. Then, she walked out at an average pace. That night, Gertrude had a dream. It was ten years into the future and she was still living with her mom in her average neighbourhood. She could not find an average job, because even the average jobs were filled by above-average workers: people who did more than what was expected of them. Gertrude loved her mom, but she wanted more for herself. She wanted her own place, her own life. A voice spoke in the dream: 'The present is nothing more than the outcome of the choices made in the past. The future will only be the results of the choices we make today.' [The words amazing, sparkle, fancy, mediocre, nodded and outcome are underlined in the source scan]

QUESTIONS: [(5+1=6)] (i) Write down the summary of the passage. Also suggest a suitable title. (ii) Who was Mr. Minster and what did he advise Gertrude? — OR — Describe Gertrude's dream?
