More than 99 percent of the world's food supply comes from the land, while less than 1 percent is from oceans and aquatic habitats. The continued production of an adequate food supply is directly dependent of ample fertile land, fresh water and energy. As the human population grows, requirements for these resources also grow. Even if these resources are never depleted, on a per capita basis they will decline significantly because they must be divided among more people. At present, fertile agricultural land is being lost at an alarming rate. The shortage of productive fertile land and combined with decreasing land productivity is the major cause of current food shortages. Water is another critical item for all crops. Massive amount of water is required during the growing season for cultivation. In fact, agricultural production consumes more fresh water than any other human activity. In many countries, people are facing shortage of fresh water. Competition for water resources among individuals, regions, countries and associated human activities is already occurring with the current world population. Water resources, critical for irrigation, are under great stress as populous cities, states and countries require and withdraw more water form rivers, lakes and aquifers every year. A major threat to maintaining future water supplies is the continuing over-use of surface and ground water resources. Questions: (i) Summarize the given passage. Also suggest a suitable title to it. (Compulsory) (ii) Explain the food resources of the world. (iii) What happens to the available food resources if the population of the world continues to increase? (iv) What is the condition of fertile land at present? (v) What are the effects of shortage of water in agriculture sector? (vi) Do you also face shortage of water in your locality? Why? or Why not? (vii) Write down the synonyms of any three of the underlined words.
